Image built on photos taken at home, of meals cooked and bread baked, during corona closure.

Placing water in the oven to create steam for enhanced crust (by which my gum got some cuts).
Experiencing away with various results.
The bread turning into creatures in family with stones.

When you think about it, the kitchen is THE workshop of (most) homes. Amazing with all those machines taken for granted. You can make all sort of things!

In a way, the concept of cooking shifts position from the necessity of eating (and to some extent, sharing), to the urge of making/creating.

Also the peculiarity of exhibiting the results to friends through photos. It could be seen as documenting presence or alternatively sharing the meal.
